Open Source License

Brightlayer UI is open source and licensed under the BSD-3-Clause license agreement. The text of this license can be found in any of our resource repositories on GitHub and NPM. You should include this license information in a comment block in any of your projects that make use of Brightlayer UI assets (i.e., themes, colors, icons).

Why Open Source?

Most modern software applications are not built in a vacuum - typically they make use of a variety of open source libraries. Brightlayer UI applications are no exception. So to make the process of using Brightlayer UI more consistent with other libraries and simplify the delivery mechanism, we have made our resources available in the same way.

Publishing these resources publicly will also allow us to continuously deliver updates and improvements seamlessly to development teams.

To learn more about adding these resources into your projects, refer to the updated Framework Guides. If you are interested in contributing to Brightlayer UI, please check out our Innersource overview.
